TO Manage YOUR Drainage District

Properly managing a drainage system that embraces new technology, provides good drainage for landowners, preserves natural resources, and stays within the legal parameters of the drainage law and government regulation can make anyone feel like they are on a classified mission. The IADD Annual Conference is designed to equip drainage commissioners, landowners, and drainage professionals with the "Drainage Intelligence" to face any drainage challenge with confidence.

Modern Ditch Design

Imagine what the ideal drainage system would look like if 100-year old ditches and tiles were not present. University of Illinois Drainage Specialist, Dr. Richard Cooke will incorporate recent drainage research to design an ideal modern drainage system.

Chat with Government Agencies

IADD invited representatives from the Office of Water Resources, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers and IL EPA to discuss the individual regulatory authority related to drainage districts. The discussion will include information on the NPDES Pesticide permit. Attendees will have ample time to ask questions.

Before You Dig

Don Wauthier will walk you through all the necessary decisions and steps, including permits to obtain, that every district needs to perform before starting a new maintenance project.
